I. Prop.: Judicial t. t.: A. Gen.: A decree or order of a judge; esp. of the prætor: a prætorian interdict: "erant interdicta formæ atque conceptiones verborum, quibus prætor aut jubebat aliquid fieri aut fieri prohibebat; quod tunc maxime fiebat, quum de possessione aut quasi possessione inter aliquos contendebatur," Just. Inst. 4, 15 init.: "summa autem divisio interdictorum hæc est; quod aut prohibitoria sunt, aut restitutoria, aut exhibitoria," id. ib. 4, 15, 1 init.: "sunt tamen qui putant proprie interdicta ea vocari, quæ prohibitoria sunt; quia interdicere sit denunciare et prohibere: restitutoria autem et exhibitoria proprie decreta vocari: sed tamen obtinuit omnia interdicta appellari, quia inter duos dicuntur," id. ib. 4, 15, 1 fin.: "sequens divisio interdictorum hæc est; quod quædam adipiscendæ possessionis causa comparata sunt, quædam retinendæ, quædam recuperandæ," id. ib. 4, 15, 2: "tertia divisio interdictorum hæc est, quod aut simplicia sunt, aut duplicia," id. ib. 4, 15, 7: ergo hac lege jus civile, causæ possessionum, prætorum interdicta tollentur, C. Agr. 3, 3: possessionem per interdictum repetere, id. Cæc. 3: interdicto contendere cum aliquo, id. de Or. 1, 10: venire ad interdictum, Petr. 13 and 83; cf. below ☞.

B. Esp.: 1. (acc. to summa divisio; cf. above): a. Interdictum prohibitorium: A prohibitory decree or order, by which the prætor forbids something being done: prohibitoria (sc. decreta), quibus prætor vetat aliquid fieri, etc., Just. Inst. 3, 15, 1.—b. Interdictum restitutorium: A decree or order commanding the restitution of something; a decree for re-establishing one in possession of property: restitutoria (sc. decreta) sunt, quibus restitui aliquid jubet (sc. prætor), etc., Just. Inst. 4, 15, 1.—c. Interdictum exhibitorium, A decree or order of the prætor requiring the bringing something into court or the personal appearance of some one before him: "exhibitoria (sc. decreta) sunt, per quæ jubet, exhiberi," Just. Inst. 4, 15, 1: hoc interdictum exhibitorium est, Ulp. Dig. 43, 5, 3, § 7; cf. id. ib. §§ 8, 9, 10.

2. (acc. to sequens divisio, in I. A.): a. Interdictum causâ adipiscendæ possessionis; or without causa: An order or decree of the prætor for taking possession of property; which, however, held good for putting a person in possession, not for keeping him in it: "adipiscendæ possessionis causa interdictum accommodatur bonorum possessori, quod appellatur Quorum bonorum; ejusque vis et potestas hæc est; ut quod ex his bonis quisque, quorum possessio alicui data est, pro herede or pro possessore possideat, id ei, cui bonorum possessio data est, restituere debeat, ... Ideo autem adipiscendæ possessionis vocatur interdictum, quia ei tantum utile est, qui nunc primum conatur adipisci rei possessionem. Itaque si quis adeptus possessionem amiserit eam, hoc interdictum ei inutile est," Just. Inst. 4, 15, 3.—b. Adipiscendæ possessionis causa interdictum: An order or decree of the prætor deciding in whom actual possession of any thing is vested, in order that its ulterior proceedings it may be known who is to be the possessor, and who the petitor: retinendæ possessionis causa comparata sunt interdicta Vti possidetis et Utrubi; quum ab utraque parte de proprietate alicui rei contr oversia sit, et ante quæritur uter ex litigatoribus possidere, et inter petere debeat, Just. Inst. 4, 15, 4; cf. "Vti possidetis pro rebus immobilibus; Utrubi vero pro mobilibus competit," Arct. ad h. l.—c. Recuperandæ possessionis causa interdictum: An order or decree of the prætor, restoring one to the possession of property from which he has been ejected: Just. Inst. 4, 15, 2; cf. also, "recuperandæ possessionis causa interdici solet, si quis ex possessione fundi vel ædium vi dejectus fuerit: nam ei proponitur interdictum Unde vi; per quod is, qui dejecit, cogitur ei restituere possessionem; licet is ab eo, qui vi dejecit, vi vel clam, vel precario possideat," id. ib. 3, 15, 6.

3. (acc. to tertia divisio, no. I. A): a. Simplex interdictum: An order or decree of the prætor in cases where the action is simply about one matter between plaintiff and defendant: simplicia (interdicta) sunt, veluti in quibus alter actor, alter reus est; qualia sunt omnia restitutoria aut exhibitoria, Just. Inst. 4, 15, 7: prohibitoriorum autem interdictorum alia simplicia sunt, alia duplicia; simplicia sunt, veluti quum prætor prohibet in loco sacro, vel in flumine publico, ripave ejus ferri, id. ib.—b. Duplicia interdicta: Orders or decrees of the prætor in cross-actions; or those wherein the two parties to the suit are alternately plaintiff and defendant: duplicia sunt veluti Uti possidetis, interdictum, et Utrubi. Ideo autem duplicia vocantur, quia par in his utriusque litigatoris in his conditio est, nec quisquam præcipue reus vel actor intelligitur; sed unusquisque tam rei quam actoris partes sustinet, Just. Inst. 4, 15, 7.

4. Interdictum Salvianum: An order or decree of the prætor, by which the landlord takes possession of such goods and chattels of the tenant, for rent due, as had been covenanted between them (a species of adipiscendæ possessionis interdictum; cf. above, no. B. 2. a.): interdictum, quod appellatur Salvianum, adipiscendæ causa comparatum est; eoque utitur dominus fundi de rebus coloni, quas is pro mercedibus fundi pignori futuras pepigisset, Just. Fin. 3, 5, 16: alios sua ipsos invidia opportunos interemit, Liv. 1, 54.—3. Sts. the possessive Gen. is combined with the possessive pronoun; but this construction is, a., only necessary when there is no reference to the subject: quum visi sunt adulti (sc. fœtus avium), paulum egredi nidis et circumvolare sedem illam præcedentes ipsæ (sc. aves) docent: tum expertas vires libero cœlo suæque ipsorum fiduciæ permittunt, Quint. 2, 6, 7.—b. Not necessary, though found, when used respecting the subject: hujusce rei conjecturam de tuo ipsius studio, Servi, facillime ceperis, C. H. In subordinate propositions the oblique cases of ipse are sts. used when the subject of the leading proposition is to be brought prominently forward, and it is then equivalent to an emphatic self: illa vox inhumana et scelerata ducitur eorum, qui negant se recusare quo minus, ipsis mortuis, terrarum omnium deflagratio consequatur, C. Fin. 3, 19 fin.: igitur legatos ad consulem cum supplicis mittit (sc. Jugurtha), qui tantummodo ipsi liberisque vitam peterent, Sall. J. 46, 2.

J.

J, j, n. indecl. or (on account of litera) f. the tenth letter of the Roman alphabet, a consonant, which, although originally represented by the same character as the vowel i, was regarded by the ancients as different from it, Charis. p. 1 P.; Diom. p. 416 ib.; Prisc. p. 544 ib.; Donat. p. 1735 ib.: its consonantal nature is most clearly proved by the fact that, with a preceding consonant, it always forms position.

Its pronunciation was like that of the German j (or English y); only where j occurs as a medial between two vowels, it is, according to the statement of the grammarians, to be pronounced double; wherefore, in such cases it is also written double by many (e. g. by Cicero), as ajio, Maija, ejjus, pejjus, etc., Quint. 1, 4, 11; Prisc. p. 545 P.; Vel. Long. p. 2219 ib., et al.

The closest relation exists between j and the vowel i, and hence, in the course of formation and inflection, it was very often changed into the latter: Pompejus, Pompei; Gajus, Gai; jam, etiam, quoniam; ajo, aibam. While, on the other hand, the i was often hardened by the poets into j, in order to form position: abjete, abjetibus, for abiete, abietibus; cf. Val. Prob. p. 1432 P.; Mar. Vict. p. 2474 ib.—J is related to g, as magis, major.

J is sometimes elided, especially in the poets, in the compounds of jacio before an i: abicit, adicit, obicit, etc., for abjicit, adjicit, objicit, etc., and in synæresis with a preceding vowel: eicit, reicit (dissyll.), for ejicit, rejicit; cf. Gell. 4, 17.

As an abbreviation, J. O. M. signifies Jovi Optimo Maximo; J. R. Juno Regina; J. V. T. Julia Victrix Togata.

The month of January, as the commencement of the year, was sacred to him, as were also the beginnings of things in general; the doors, also, of houses were under his especial protection. His temple, situate in the forum, had two doors, that were opposite to each other, and which were shut in time of peace, but open in time of war. It was closed in the reign of Numa, after the first Punic war, on three different occasions in the time of Augustus; and also in the reigns of Nero, Vespasian, and Constantius. jūbĭlæus (poet. jūbĭlæus), a, um, adj. [ἰωβηλαῖος ; akin to Heb. יוֹבֵל ; and prob. also to the same Sanscr. root as jubilum : v. jubilum] Of or belonging to the jubilee (The year of jubilee took place every fiftieth year, in which all Jewish bondmen and servants were set at liberty, and all lands reverted to their legitimate owners) : habebit emptor quod emerat usque ad annum jubilæum, Vulg. Lev. 25, 28 : si paupertate compulsus vendiderit se tibi frater tuus .... usque ad annum jubilæum operabitur apud te, Et postea egredietur cum liberis suis, etc., id. ib. 25, 40.—As Subst.: jubilæus, i, m. (sc. annus or dies) : The jubilee : revertetur homo ad possessionem suam, et unusquisque rediet ad familiam pristinam, quia jubilæus est, et quinquagesimus annus, Lev. 25, 11 : anno jubilæi redient omnes ad possessiones suas, id. ib. 25, 13 : ob sanctificationem jubilæi, id. ib. 25, 12 : septimo die sacerdotes tollant septem buccinas, quarum usus est in jubilæo, id. Jos. 6, 4 ; so, id. ib. 6, 13 : quinquagesimus annus Quum jubilæus adest, Arat. Act. Apost. 2, 677.

☞ Some have taken the word jubilæi, orum, m. at Vulg. Jos. 6, 6 : "tollant septem buccinas jubilæorum," in a metonymical sense, viz., Ram's horns ; inasmuch as they conceive that the trumpets used in proclaiming the jubilee were made of ram's horns. This rendering, however, cannot be supported. In the above passage, as in other places where the word is used substantively, its accustomed force attaches to it.

K.

K, k, indecl. n. or (on account of litera) f., the eleventh letter of the Roman alphabet, used in the oldest period of the language as a separate character for the sound k, while C was used for the sound g. When, in course of time, the character C came to be used also for the k-sound, and, after the introduction of the character G, was used for it alone, the K disappeared almost entirely from the Latin orthography, except in certain abbreviations, as K. for Cæso, K. or Kal. for Calendæ. Cf. Quint. 1, 4, 9; id. 1, 7, 10; Diom. p. 417 P.; Prisc. p. 560 P.; Huer. de Nom. Hebr. p. 91.—K is also found in KA. for capitalis, KK. for castrorum, K. S. for carus suis; and in the Jurists (acc. to Isid. Orig. 1, 22, 1) K =caput; KK = calumniæ causa.
